OAK RIDGE, Tenn. — Judy Roitman will discuss the mission of the Tennessee Health Care Campaign when the Anderson County Democratic Women's Club meets at 6 p.m. Monday.

Joining Roitman will be Jim Nelson. Both are advocates for positive change in public health and health care and part of the health care justice movement, according to a news release.

The Tennessee Health Care Campaign is a nonprofit consumer health care advocacy group. Since its beginnings in 1989, its mission has been for all to have guaranteed affordable health care choices. Ongoing work includes leading Tennessee in the exciting new national effort for health care reform. The organization is especially interested in children's health care and expanding continuous and quality health care through Medicaid/TennCare. Consumers, advocates and social service professionals from across the state make up the organization's board.

Roitman has long been involved with health care issues while working for nonprofit organizations in the region.

Tell me again why I should pay for medical care for some trash that has never worked in his/her life?

And has plans to never do so....

Waste your OWN money, Demon rats.
